Notable moments from my recruiting experience

Current events

Snap paused my interview process because of the LA wildfires.

Artificial application

One company rejected me for a role I never applied to, after a recruiter told me to follow up in January.

Déjà vu

One company rejected me twice for the same application, while another reached out about the same role they rejected me for.

Rapid rejections

Rejected 90 minutes after I saved an application, before I hit submit by one company, two others took 90 minutes and 5 hours.

Ghosted

Though companies were forthright overall, recruiters at three companies went quiet mid-process, another followed up with an auto-rejection.

Too junior, then too senior

Learned that two roles I applied to were too entry level, and I was informed that I was too experienced for two other roles.

Key takeaways

Volume ≠ success

August's 130 applications produced 6 interview processes.
September's 71 produced 7.

Company-site applications rarely worked

Company sites: 177 applications, 5 interview processes (2.8%).
LinkedIn: 397 applications, 31 (7.8%).

Role fit beat industry

Strategy & Ops converted at 8.8% vs 4.0% for other functions.
Tech vs other industries: 6.8% vs 5.6%.
Product and marketing: 3 of 150 (2.0%).

Final round ≠ offer

5 final rounds averaged about 4 interviews each. Offers: 0.
